9/28/16 – Halas Farm Market

It was all the way back in 1925 when Halas Farm Market, currently one of Danbury's few working farms, was founded. Today, the business remains in the family after four generations. Their history is truly remarkable, as is their success today.

The farm has worked with the changing times. As the trend towards organic produce grew, the Halas farm came with it by establishing more sustainable practices and building a greenhouse on the farm.

You can find just about anything you'd expect at Halas Farm Market and more! There is fresh grown produce as well as free range eggs available all year. They sell plants, trees and garden supplies, as well as pottery, gifts and artisanal products.

We are proud to have Halas Farm as part of the traditions and foundation Danbury is built on. And there is no better time to stop by because they are prepared for this wonderful season with fall décor and pumpkins galore!

Follow Halas Farm Market on Facebook to see a sneak peak of what they have to offer or visit their website at:
www.halasfarm.com