

2/8/2017 – Workspace Collective

“Workspace Collective is a retail + design co-op dedicated to reinventing the boutique shopping experience within the community where customers and designers engage with, learn from and inspire each other,” said Meagan Cann, owner of Workspace Collective. “We are committed to curating a lifestyle shop filled with quality apparel, thoughtfully created accessories, and unique home goods, all produced with sustainable + mindful ethos. As an added value, we highlight local designers, providing a connecting experience for customers to see how their purchases are made, as well as accessibility to workshops to value the creative process even more.”

Meagan Cann is a native of Danbury who returned to her home town with great ideas and a plan for a unique business. She created Workspace Collective after her experience working in the fashion industry. The idea was for a boutique that served as a medium for local designers and artists to not only sell their pieces but also connect with people in the area. She also uses the opportunity to create a maker-buyer relationship for her customers.

The store combines the model of boutique shopping with that of an art gallery. This culminates in a store where one doesn't just buy items, but can also understand where they come from - an especially educational experience considering the processes and materials used by some local artists. Workspace Collective features a range of products from a host of different sources including clothing, jewelry, pottery and various household products.

To see what local artists and designers are producing and to learn about their creative techniques, stop by Workspace Collective on Main Street. Visit the website to stay in-the-know about upcoming fashion shows and events!

287 Main Street Danbury, CT 06810
www.workspacecollective.co

